Identity 1968

scientific essay from the year 2005 in the subject psychology developmental psychology grade 1 0 university of kassel language english abstract erik h erikson 1902 1994 is without a doubt one of the most outstanding psychoanalysts of the last century the native dane and later us american further developed the psychosocial aspects and the developmental phases of adulthood in sigmund freud s stage theory it is erikson s basic assumption that in the course of a lifetime the human being goes through eight developmental phases which are laid out in an internal development plan on each level it is required to solve the relevant crisis embodied by the integration of opposite poles presenting the development tasks the successful handling of which is in turn of importance for the following phases the term crisis does not have a negative connotation for erikson but rather is seen as a state which through constructive resolution leads to further development which is being integrated and internalized into the own self image each component comes to its ascendance meets its crisis and finds its lasting solution toward the end of the stages mentioned all of them exist in the beginning in some form hence the human development is a process alternating between levels crises and the new balance in order to reach increasingly mature stages in detail erikson studied the possibilities of an individual s advancement and the affective powers that allow it to act this becomes particularly obvious in the eight psychosocial phases which now should be the focus of this paper this demonstrates that erikson did see development as above all a lifelong process erik erikson the man who single handedly coined the phrase identity crisis erikson's world fame in multiple fields includes education psychohistory anthropology and psychoanalysis all without a college degree of any kind erikson extends the assumptions of freud unlike other theorists who repudiate freud's findings offering a novel outlook in the process erikson 1963 the post freudian theory of erik erikson acts as an extension to the infantile developmental stages of freud incorporating stages of adolescence adulthood and old age the suggestion of erikson is that contributing to the formation of personality is a psychosocial struggle during each stage this struggle takes the form of an identity crisis from adolescence on acting as a turning point in one's life that can either weaken or strengthen one's personality erikson's post freudian theory is an extension of psychoanalysis one that erikson believes that in time freud himself may have covered although erikson's lifecycle approach to personality makes use of freudian theory as the foundation several differences exist between freud and erikson erikson places more emphasis on both historical and social influences in addition to his elaboration of psychosexual stages beyond childhood like those of other personality theorists erikson's post freudian theory is a reflection of his personal background including a lifelong search for his identity experiences with a variety of cultures extensive travels and the arts in a moment in our history beset with grave doubts erik h erickson inquires into the nature and structure of the shared visions which invigorate some eras and seemed so fatefully lacking in others he illustrates the human propensity for play and vision from the toy world of childhood to the dream life of adults and from the artist's imagination to the scientist's reason finally he enlarges on the origins and structure of one shared vision of universal significance namely the american dream such a worldview he concludes consists of both vision and counter vision political and religious economic and technological artistic and scientific which vie with each other to give a coherent meaning to shared realities and to liberate individual and communal energy erickson postulates that a space time orientation provided by a viable worldview is complimentary to the inner work of the individual psyche and is attuned to its multiple functions in a central chapter the author links the phylogeny and the ontogeny of worldviews by describing stages in the ritualization of everyday life that is the interplay of customs including the use of language with from birth to death convey and confirm the logic of the visions predominant or contending in a society he emphasizes the playful and yet compelling power of viable ritualization to connect individual growth with the maintenance of a vital institutions but he also illustrates the fateful tendency of human interplay to turn into self deception and collusion of ritualization to become deadly ritualism and of visions to end in nightmares of alienation and distraction erickson advocates the pooling of interdisciplinary insights in order to clarify the conscious and unconscious motivation which works for or against the more universal and more insightful worldview essential in a technological age
