i had formed a similar plan to send aurora to the same school when she should arrive we talked about education that afternoon through her interpreter but she shook her head sadly she would like to go to school and study music as her father had planned she should before the massacres but now she had a message to deliver a message from her suffering nation to the mothers and fathers of the united states the determination in the child s eyes made me ask her her age and she answered seventeen tired and worn out nervously as she was aurora insisted upon telling us of the scenes she had left behind her massacres families driven out across the desert girls sold into turkish harems women ravished by the roadside little children dying of starvation she begged us to help her to help her people my father said america was the friend of the oppressed general andranik sent me here because he trusted you to help me she pleaded and so her story was translated sometimes there had to be intervals of rest of several days because her suffering had so unnerved her she wanted to keep at it during all the heat of the summer but by using the argument that she would learn english we persuaded her to go to a camp off the coast of connecticut for three weeks you who read the story of aurora mardiganian s last three years will find it hard to believe that in our day and generation such things are possible your emotions will doubtless be similar to mine when i first heard of the suffering of her people i remember very distinctly my feelings when early in october of 1917 i attended a luncheon given by the executive committee of the american committee for armenian and syrian relief to a group of seventeen american consuls and missionaries who had just returned from turkey after witnessing two years of massacre and deportation i listened to persons the truthfulness of whose statements i could not doubt tell how a church had been filled with christian seductress women who ravished the world and their lost art of love ravished by the spirit is a sympathetic yet critical account of the profound effect of nova scotia preacher henry alline and his new light disciples on the nineteenth century evangelical ethos of nova scotia new brunswick and neighbouring new england alline s pietistic and mystical gospel was influential on the free will and calvinist baptist churches and also gave shape and substance to the region s revivalistic tradition in this provocative discussion of various religious revivals the author argues that at the heart of these significant social movements lay a collective yearning for intimacy and a desparate search for meaningful relationships
