despite the considerable expansion of scholarly studies of minangkabau society in recent years the paucity of historical research on west sumatra is still notable especially is this so for the nineteenth century where apart from the new perspectives provided in christine dobbin s series of articles on the padri wars vir tually nothing has been published during the past decade a significant study dealing with this period that certainly merited publication was the 1971 university of wisconsin dissertation of elizabeth e graves which following her revision we are now pleased to bring out in our monograph series in this revision dr graves was not able to draw on dobbin s work and other germane material published during the last few years but most of the data she has marshaled and analyzed cannot be found in other published sources and there is no doubt that her monograph fills many of the extensive gaps in our knowledge of nineteenth century minangkabau society and its interaction with dutch political and economic power moreover those familiar with taufik abdullah s classic study schools and politics the kaum muda in west sumatra 1927 1933 will find an excellent complement in her chap ters on the development of secular education during this earlier period in publishing this study the cornell modern indonesia project is confident that it provides an important addition to the regional dimension of indonesian history and illuminating insights into the shaping of nineteenth century minangkabau society and the way its character set the stage for better known developments in the present century george mct kahin in the early 20th century the dutch east indies was a colony in flux greater access to education meant an increasingly literate financial elite and thus a burgeoning literary industry the lower class meanwhile found its entertainment in stage performances oral literature often loosely adapted from famous novels the film industry itself was attempting to find a successful formula and in its early years faced heavy competition from the theatre educated women called for women s rights and protection of women s welfare as the economy began to transform from one based on the production of raw goods to one based in manufacturing in this turbulent background the social act of adapting films from novels emerged this phenomenon began in 1927 with the adaptation of eulis atjih by g krugers and ended in 1942 before the japanese occupation with the adaptation of siti noerbaja by lie tek swie a total of eleven films were adapted from eight novels in the indies only one author had multiple works adapted and two novels were adapted more than once the nine producers and directors involved in adapting novels came from a variety of ethnicities the works adapted meanwhile were generally popular in wide society though often best known through stage performances and adaptations the adaptation process from this period has been little understood yet important for understanding the history of screen adaptations which are quickly becoming the most lucrative type of film in indonesia this exciting new contribution sheds light on the obscure history of film adaptation in indonesia and lays the groundwork for further research ugm press ugm gadjah mada university press scholars of language ideology have encouraged us to reflect on and explore where social categories come from how they have been reproduced and whether and to what extent they are relevant to everyday interactional practices taking up on these issues this book focuses on how ethnicity has been semiotically constructed valued and reproduced in indonesia since dutch colonial times and how this category is drawn upon in everyday talk in doing so this book also seeks to engage with scholarship on superdiversity while highlighting some points of engagement with work on ideas about community the book draws upon a broad range of scholarship on indonesia recordings of indonesian television from the mid 1990s onwards and recordings of the talk of indonesian students living in japan it is argued that some of the main mechanisms for the reproduction and revaluation of ethnicity and its links with linguistic form include waves of technological innovations that bring people into contact e g changes in transportation infrastructure introduction of print media television radio the internet etc and the increasing use of one to many participation frameworks such as school classrooms and the mass media in examining the talk of sojourning indonesians the book goes on to explore how ideologies about ethnicity are used to establish and maintain convivial social relations while in japan maintaining such relationships is not a trivial thing and it is argued that the pursuit of conviviality is an important practice because of its relationship with broader concerns about eking out a living
